You're not exactly wrong. When incidents occur in your workplace, one of the things you should do first is to file an incident report. An incident report is a document that is filled out in the event of accidents or unusual accidents occurring in an office or institution. Some tips on how to write an incident report If your company has some form or protocol when reporting incidents, you may first have to provide a form and ask for the necessary steps to report an incident. Next is that you have to get the facts. If you are not very familiar with some parts of the incident, you can ask witnesses who are present at the time of the incident. This may include the date, time and location of the accident. It must also have the name or names of those involved. You can also talk about what led to what happened. Be careful with the facts, be accurate as much as possible, and of course the sequence is something that happened first and what happened afterwards. Your narrative or report must be clear, except to be accurate; after all, the effects of the person/face and occurrence is on the line. You can also include some suggestions on how to prevent the incident again. The importance of reporting incidents reporting an incident prompts the facility's management to make public the rules and fixes to prevent things from re-emerging in the future. It is also so that the company can either give due compensation or avoid the necessary fees or penalties. It is also important that staff and managers are notified and therefore able to respond to the needs of those involved in the incident. We also have crime reports if you need to process them as well.
